The judge found that prohibiting prostitution in the area where police said they found at least 35 sex workers — the area designated in the then-proposed ordinance, known as Alameda Point — was a government way to attempt to abridge free speech rights. "The only conceivable harm that could flow from proposed Ordinance 2349 is that it would reduce profits for plaintiffs and others who similarly work the Alameda Point region," the judge wrote. Gergel is denying a city motion to strike the injunction on the grounds that the court does not have the authority to grant such an injunction and that the ordinance's passage was not unlawful. The city has until Feb. 18 to decide whether to appeal to the Ninth Circuit or to seek a stay with the Supreme Court. Matthew Whitaker, who has taken over as acting attorney general, did not immediately comment.using System; using System.Collections.Generic; using System.Text; namespace DotNetSiemensPLCToolBoxLibrary.Configuration.Fields { public class FieldLocation { public long mv_loc; public FieldLocation(long loc) { mv_loc = loc
